

KINGSTON ARTS PRECINCT BY SUBURBAN LAND AGENCY

The Kingston Arts Precinct is a visual arts hub in the heart of the Kingston Foreshore with opportunities for integration with a new mixed use commercial and residential development. ACT Government is delivering the arts hub through a land sale process that elevates innovative design and place making as the drivers of the future development outcomes.

The site is home to the first two permanent public buildings built in Canberra, playing an important part in the early development of Canberra as source of power generation and has been heritage-listed for its industrial and architectural significance. The site tour will explore how Geocon's proposed design concept for the Kingston Arts Precinct will integrate new uses with those already on-site, as well as complement and enhance existing heritage values.

SPICING UP DICKSON BY PLACE LABORATORY

First stop is Dickson Village to hear about the seven day makeover, a community led activation that was the catalyst for the ACT government's adoption of an action orientated planning approach to revitalise the tired public spaces of Dickson.

Second stop is the micro park at Dickson Swimming Pool, a demonstration of how a small intervention can transform an underutilised space into a hub of activity.

Final stop is Woolley Street to experience firsthand the action orientated planning approach, an iterative design process developed using place planning, experimentation, measurement and consultation.

Anna Chauvel is a local Canberra landscape architect and co-founder of PLACE Laboratory. She is an advocate of a people focused approach to designing public spaces, using landscape architecture as a way to connect people with place.

Jason Jhay Mann is a small business owner that found place making through change and uncertainty in his shopping centre. Highly passionate and driven, Jhay discovered he has an inherent knack for working with local community to inspire place making values.
